Can you imagine living all day in a cave? In March 2021, an experiment in France sent 15 volunteers into a cave for 40 days. The team had no phones, clocks or water in the cave.

During their time in the cave, the volunteers slept in a tent and used a bike to make electricity because there was no natural light. They also got water from a well which was about 45 meters underground. Since there was no sunlight, they had to follow their body clocks to know when to sleep and eat.

The experiment is part of a project called Deep Time. Its purpose is to see what will happen if people lose their sense of time. The experiment ended in April and the volunteers were given special sunglasses when they came out of the cave. This is because they saw sunlight for the first time in 40 days.

However, not all the volunteers were ready to get out of there. Two-thirds, in fact, loved it and wanted to keep going. Some said that they wanted to live there longer. "For once in our lives, we had time and could stop to live and do our own things. It was great." said one of them.

31. How did the volunteers get water in the cave?
 - A. They got water from the river.

 - D. There was no sunlight in the cave.
33. What happened to the volunteers when the experiment ended?
 - A. They can't see the sunlight.
 - B. None of the volunteers were ready to get out of there.
 - C. Two-thirds of the volunteers loved living in the wild and wanted to keep going.
 - D. The volunteers lived in the cave in the dark without light powers.
34. What did the team have in the cave?
 - A. Sunlight.
 - B. Clocks.
 - C. A bike.
 - D. Phones.
35. What's the purpose of the experiment?
 - A. To experience the differences between the wild and city life.
 - B. To see what will be found when people lose their sense of time.
 - C. To see whether people will lose their sense of time when living in a cave.
 - D. To find the possibility of living in the cave.

As a teenager, you may sometimes feel helpless when having problems with your parents. Chen Zanzao, a 17-year-old from Shenzhen, has created a charity community called Dear Theodosia to help families facing similar problems professionally. It now has 2, 000 regular participants(定期参与者).

Chen's idea was inspired by the three-child policy. "My friend Sina and I thought it would bring problems. It would bring problems like parental favoritism (父母偏心), " Chen said. "Most families still don't know any methods to deal with this. "

They started to research both scientific parenting styles and people's needs. They read a lot of literature and studies on the topic and surveyed more than 1,000 people. They found that the most effective and healthy family relationships are when parents are highly engaged(参与的) in their children's lives.

They then founded the community to spread the idea. “We hold lectures and discussions as well as go on radio and TV programs to promote useful information, ” Chen said.

Chen and his friend Sina would do one-on-one conversations with people who felt self-conscious(难为情的) about sharing their stories. “ It’s understandable that at first, they need time to trust us since we are young, ” Chen said. “ But listening is the key and slowly, they will realize that we are professional. ”

“We met many parents saying, ‘I never thought raising a child would be this difficult’, so I think it’s really important that parents think through whether they could take the responsibility before they rush into anything.” Chen added.

36. What made Chen Zanzao set up Dear Theodosia?
 - A. He wanted to collect methods to solve his family problems.
 - B. He was once supported by a charity community.
 - C. He once experienced parental favoritism.
 - D. He thought the three-child policy in China may bring family problems.
37. In what way does Chen help parents?
 - A. He encourages them to read studies on family relationships.
 - B. He helps self-conscious people speak about their stories in public.
 - C. He holds one-on-one conversations with people and gives advice.
 - D. He gives lectures to children about how to listen carefully to parents.

38. What might Chen suggest to those planning to be parents?
- A. Worrying too much can help them become good parents.
- B. They should be responsible for everything their children do.
- C. They should fully consider whether they are ready to have a child.
- D. It is too difficult to raise a child.

39. What's the meaning of the underlined word “promote” in Paragraph 4?

- [illegible]

40. Which statement is NOT true according to the passage?

- A. The charity community Dear Theodosia has 2,000 regular participants.
- B. Some people felt self-conscious about sharing their stories with the volunteers.
- C. Many people didn't trust the young volunteers.
- D. The most healthy family relationships depends on the communication between the parents and children.
